

CREATING LARGE GROUP DIALOGUE IN ORGANISATIONS AND SOCIETY

A two-year IGA professional developmental programme

BIRMINGHAM 2017 – 2019

12 weekends over 2 years – from June 2017 to Sept 2019

This programme is designed for senior practitioners from any professional background facing the challenge inherent in settings where large group processes operate. These might be an organisation, project team, community group or any group where there is a wish to include people in decision-making, encourage consultation processes, bridge racial, cultural and religious divides, or tackle local and global challenges. The particular focus is on how hidden processes in the socio-political context impede the capacity to think creatively when making decisions, developing policy or building strategy.

Based in an easily accessible residential setting at beautiful Woodbrooke in Birmingham, Europe's only Quaker Study Centre, the programme takes place over twelve weekends over two years. Delegates will have the opportunity through experiential work and seminars to learn how to apply group analytic principles to facilitate dialogue in any setting. Delegates will work on a 'live project' based on their own working environment as a piece of 'action research' to apply their learning to their specific contexts.
